Dear Keith,

We are honored to offer our enthusiastic support for your upcoming project, "Those on the Frontlines of Cancer." We believe that Wish Upon a Teen offers a unique prospective on the impact cancer has on adolescents patients at the critical developmental stage when they are transitioning from childhood to adulthood.

Everyone understands that the teenage years are very challenging. It is a time when young people want to spend time with their peers and test their skills of independence. When cancer hits a teenager, instead of moving toward independence, they find themselves depending more on their parents to help take care of their basic needs. They are forced to curtail their very active lifestyles and often become depressed, frustrated and angry at a crucial time when their friends are learning to drive or planning for college. Wish Upon a Teen specifically targets its programming and services to these teens, putting the emphasis on making their lives as normal – and comfortable – as possible.

Your important project promises to explore how cancer impacts people of all ages, and we look forward to offering your our distinctive point of view on a group that often is overlooked, but who inspire us every day to do the important work we do.

Warm regards,
